Dear Hiring Manager:

I've been dealing with bugs for the last two years at my previous work. I've been that one Google-man since I've got my first PC. Recently decided it's time I get rewarded for it.

I can offer your company experience in using various ERP systems. At my previous workplace I had to work with very buggy software and "terribly busy" system administrator. Once we returned to the stone age for a week, because of the issue, I've told technical specialists about two months before.

But this was not the only problem I found. A little prehistory: our bosses main policy was to give every employee as less information as possible to get work done. The key problem on the way was our software. Using standard reports and calculator anyone was (I think "is") able to get not everything but much "secret" information.

By doing my job I want to save people's nerves and time.

I've chosen IT for that purpose because we are stepping in information age and information will be the main resource. Once, in my student time, I've got a project which made me analyse statistics data stored in .txt file…

Reasonable question: "Why have you chosen software testing?". My answer: I don't know how long people will pay for good programs, but they will have to pay when something gone wrong. Based on this you may be guessed about my future plan on security testing and you are right.

For the present I want to get experience because now I have no children, wife or any other responsibilities.

I'd appreciate the opportunity to discuss the position and your needs for the role. Please contact me and let me know how I can help you.

Thank you so much for your consideration.

Sincerely, Hutsko A. V.
